TEXT AA History of Pizza

- | | | |
|---|--|----|
| 1 | The world's most popular fast food has ancient roots, but it was a royal seal of approval in 1889 that set pizza on the path to global domination. | |
| 2 | Pizza is the world's favourite fast food. We eat it everywhere – at home, in restaurants, on street corners. But the story of how the humble pizza came to enjoy such global dominance reveals much about the history of migration, economics and technological change. People have been eating pizza, in one form or another, for centuries. | 5 |
| 3 | It was only in the late 18th-century Naples that the pizza as we now know it came into being. Under the Bourbon kings, Naples had become one of the largest cities in Europe. Fuelled by overseas trade and a steady invasion of peasants from the countryside, its population ballooned. As the urban economy struggled to keep pace, an ever-greater number of the city's inhabitants fell into poverty. The most abject of these were known as lazzaroni, because their ragged appearance resembled that of Lazarus. | 10 |
| 4 | Numbering around 50,000 they scraped by on the pittance they earned as porters, messengers or casual labourers. Always rushing about in search of work, they needed food that was cheap and easy to eat. Pizzas met this need. Sold not in shops, but by street vendors carrying huge boxes under their arms, they would be cut to meet the customer's budget or appetite. | 15 |
| 5 | For a long time, pizzas were scorned by food writers. Associated with the crushing poverty of the lazzaroni, they were frequently slandered as 'disgusting', especially by foreign visitors. | 20 |
| 6 | All that changed after Italian unification. While on a visit to Naples in 1889, King Umberto I and Queen Margherita grew tired of the complicated French dishes they were served for breakfast, lunch and dinner. Hastily summoned to prepare some local specialities for the queen, the pizza chef Raffaele Esposito cooked three sorts of pizza: one with ¹ lard, ² caciocavallo and basil; another with ³ cecenielli; and a third with tomatoes, mozzarella and basil. The queen was delighted. Her favourite – the last of the three – was christened pizza margherita in her honour. | 25 |
| 7 | This signalled an important shift. Margherita's seal of approval not only elevated the pizza from being a food fit only for lazzaroni to being something a royal family could enjoy, but also transformed pizza from a local into a truly national dish. It introduced the notion that pizza was a genuinely Italian food – similar to pasta and polenta. | 30 |

8	By the end of the 19th century, Italian emigrants had already reached the East Coast; and in 1905, the first pizzeria – Lombardi’s – was opened in New York City. Soon, pizza became an American institution. Spreading across the country, it was quickly taken up by enterprising restaurateurs (who were often not from an Italian background) and adapted to reflect local tastes, identities and needs.	40
9	From the 1950s onwards, the rapid pace of economic and technological change in the US transformed the pizza even more radically. Two changes are worthy of note. The first was the ‘domestication’ of pizza. As disposable incomes grew, fridges and freezers became increasingly common and demand for ‘convenience’ foods grew – prompting the development of the frozen pizza. The second change was the ‘commercialisation’ of pizza. With the growing availability of cars and motorcycles, it became possible to deliver freshly cooked food to customers’ doors – and pizza was among the first dishes to be served up.	45 50
10	Today’s pizzas are far removed from those of the lazzaroni; and many pizza purists – especially in Naples – cringe at some of the more outlandish toppings that are now on offer. But pizza is still recognisable as pizza and centuries of social, economic and technological change are baked into every slice.	55

TEXT C

Diet and nutrition is the first pillar of health. We eat to live, so we need to eat nourishing, nutritious food. Here are some steps to follow and keep your body healthy.

Drinking plenty of water can help promote weight loss by reducing your food intake, especially if you drink water before a meal. It might also work by increasing fat burning, which can help enhance long-term weight loss. When it comes to losing weight, protein is incredibly important. Studies show that increasing your intake of protein may help keep you full and curb your appetite.

Cardio exercises, such as walking, swimming, or jogging, are also important – both for increasing weight loss and supporting overall health. Another change you can make is to limit your intake of sugar-sweetened beverages, including sodas, fruit juices, chocolate milk, and other drinks with added sugar.

Eating fewer refined carbs may promote weight loss by altering levels of specific hormones that regulate your appetite, such as peptide YY. It's also best to avoid ultra-processed foods. Raised stress levels can also disrupt hormonal balance and trigger emotional eating. Find a method to reduce stress like practicing yoga or spending time outdoors.

According to research from 2016, almost one-third of people's daily energy intake comes from snacking. It is a good idea to prepare healthy homemade snacks that is low in sugar.
